

List of Fuchsias with Various Attributes

I started compiling this list for my own use, I hope you may also find it useful. I have put it on the website at this early stage in the hope that other people will send in contributions. When more than one grower has listed a plant as sun tolerant I will change the colour of the notation to red, so far I have only given red notations to those I grew at Woodford for years that also grow well at Lawson.

To compile the initial list I re-read all my own books and magazines and as those as I could borrow from friends and local libraries., looking through not only lists of various attributes but cultivar descriptions as well, for features that interested me.

Here in Australia heat and sun tolerance is a major factor in choosing fuchsias, particularly for me as I am growing them in the garden. Sun/Heat tolerance information has been collated from various publications and the country of origin indicated. I thought this was useful; if a European publication listed a fuchsia as intolerant of heat or sun it really wasn't much point in trying to grow it in Australia unless it had some outstanding feature that made it desirable and worth trying. With the Blue Mountains notations (mostly from the last 3 years experience in my garden), in most cases the plant will not have been grown in all situations, so a B3 (under 50% shade sail) notation does not automatically mean that it would not grow in B1 or B2 conditions, just that it grows well in B3 conditions. Where the notation is in red it has been grown for several years in at least 2 locations. Send me names of fuchsias you have found to be heat and sun tolerant. Please keep in mind various positions in a town or even a garden will have different growing conditions, you will get to know the hot spots and frost pockets in your own garden and plant accordingly.

I also wanted to list other features of the plants to help with selection.

These features were frost tolerance and then certain distinctive attributes (T for Type), I though were worth noting. Then I added G for Growth so I knew whether they were upright or trailing, and B for bloom type, included here encliantra or tubular as well as single or double. Then I went through some of the mail order catalogues I had, so I could list who sold the fuchsias listed (check they still do if you want to order) this will be added to as time permits. None of these categories are exhaustive as initially it was only for my own use.

When I see a picture of a fuchsia I like, I check it against the list and see if has any of the attributes I need, I have been fairly successful in buying appropriate plants or planting the ones I acquire in a suitable position.

I am happy to add information from other fuchsia growers please contact me if you are interested

Column meanings

H = Heat tolerant has the following notations

A = listed as heat tolerant in an Australian publication

B1 = Heat tolerant in Blue Mountains if grown in garden with little on no shade.

B2 = Heat tolerant in Blue Mountains if grown in garden with shade for part of the day.

Bp = Heat tolerant in Blue Mountains if grown in pots in a shade house with ?? Shade cloth (coming soon)

B3 = Heat tolerant in Blue Mountains if grown in garden under a 50% shade sail

Bx = NOT heat tolerant in Blue Mountains

E = listed as heat tolerant in a British or European publication.

U = listed as heat tolerant in a American publication.

X = Listed as NOT heat tolerant in any publication

F = Frost Tolerance. Note at this stage the only available information is for Lawson in the mid Blue Mountains in 2005/-7 with a small number of frosty nights. Damage seems to only occur on when a damp frosty night is followed by early sun.

1 = completely frost tolerant in Mid Blue Mountains

2 = only minor frost damage in Mid Blue Mountains (less than 1/3 of leaves damaged).

3 = major frost damage in Mid Blue Mountains (most of leaves damaged) but re-grew satisfactorily.

4 = Intolerant of frost in Mid Blue Mountains (died or was very slow to recover)

B = Bloom/flower type has the following notations

S = Single

2 = Semi Double

D = Double

E = Encliandra or similar

T = Tubular flowers like Triphylla, Fulgens, corymbiflora or Boliviana

G = Growth has the following notations

T = Trailing or semi trailing

L = Lax

U = Upright

T = Type – meaning unusual features or useful attributes - has the following notations

D = Dwarf or small plant (some European plants grow much larger in Australia)

V = Variegated or coloured foliage

C = Suitable to train as a climber

3 = 3 different flowers on one bush

G = Groundcover

T = Tree

N = Australian nurseries selling by mailorder.

This list is in PDF format (to save space as the list is so large) so you can't download it and amend it. I am happy to send the list in Word format on a CD if any one would like one. The Word version of list can be sorted by each column. If you want a list of double fuchsias that are frost tolerant you can sort by the B column and cut out all the ones with D for double, and then sort this by F column.
